

Folly Bah Thibalt

Folly Bah Thibault is a renowned journalist and Principal Presenter for Al Jazeera English, based in Doha, Qatar. She is the founder and president of Elle ira à l'école Fondation Kesso Bah, an NGO dedicated to promoting girls' education in Guinea and across West Africa. A Global Champion for Education Cannot Wait, the UN's fund for education in crises, she has been a strong advocate for access to learning worldwide. Joining Al Jazeera in 2010 after working with France 24, Radio France International, and Voice of America, Thibault has covered major global events, including Barack Obama's historic 2008 presidential election. She has anchored award-winning programs, such as the first-ever UN Secretary-General candidates' debate (2016) and the Nobel Peace Prize Interview in Oslo. Thibault has interviewed prominent leaders and changemakers, including Kenyan President William Ruto, Bill Gates, WTO Director-General Ngozi Okonjo-Iweala, Malala Yusufzai, Wole Soyinka, and UN Deputy Secretary-General Amina Mohammed. Known for her clarity, impartiality, and ability to unpack complex issues, she has moderated high-level forums for the UN, EU, and AU. Born in Conakry, Guinea, she holds a BA in Broadcast Journalism from Howard University and an MA in International Communication from American University, Washington, D.C. She is fluent in English, French, Peulh, and conversant in Swahili.
